

On the cover

The way that economies work has changed radically. So must economic policy: leader, page 13. Inflation is losing its meaning as an economic indicator, says Henry Curr. See our special report, after page 48. What to make of the strife at the European Central Bank: Free exchange, page 79

• Trump and Ukraine—the backstory The telephone call that led Congress to investigate Donald Trump was the latest link in a long, sad and sordid chain: briefing, page 24. Assessing Congress's options for dealing with an unco-operative White House, page 27. Institutional conservatives would condemn the president; Republicans probably will not: Lexington, page 36

• India's tottering banks A rotten financial system could ruin the country's economic prospects: leader, page 16. Banks' share prices are being hammered. Investors worry about what horror will be revealed next, page 73

• Where are all the self-driving cars? The arrival of autonomous vehicles is running late. Blame Silicon Valley hype—and the limits of AI: leader, page 14. The path to driverless vehicles is long and winding. China is taking an alternative route to the West's, page 65

• Fake moos: the rise of plant-based meat The potential for a radically different food chain, page 61
